A World Away – And Based In Greenville – Charity Frees Children, Delivers Clean Water

BY KATHY LAUGHLIN

Sarah Kelley's children can turn on any faucet in their Greenville home and pour a glass of clean water.

The children she helps thousands of miles away cannot.

It's been nine years since Kelley traveled to a village in Sierra Leone to watch her coworkers and a local crew drill a water well. As the crew was setting up, Kelley saw a mother from the village walk past, a daughter by her side and a toddler strapped to her back.

"I followed them," Kelley says. "We came to ... the technical term is an 'open well' ... but it's a hole in the ground. The water has bugs and debris. It's gross."

The woman's daughter hooked a bucket onto a long stick with a notch. "She lowers the bucket into this well and pulls it back up. The mother puts the bucket on her head, and they slowly start back up the path."

At that time, Kelley had been with Greenville-based Set Free Alliance for six months. Today, she is its CEO.

"Watching, I understood how important this work is. My two kids were about the same age. The only thing separating our two families was where I happened to be born and where they happened to be born. I had overwhelming gratitude. My kids can turn on any faucet in our house. And that water is clean. But this family ... this water would probably make them sick."

Because Set Free's work is funded solely by donations, the work is not impacted by recent cuts in federal aid, says Andrew Hendricks, an Upstate native and Program Director of Set Free. "Set Free is proud to not skip a beat."

The Christian-based charity was founded by Upstate engineer Roland Bergeron, who led missions in the early 2000s to drill water wells in Honduras.

"Roland realized that we were doing the right thing, but in the wrong location," Kelley says.

Bergeron switched the group's focus to Liberia and began fundraising with Brookwood Church in Simpsonville to purchase a drill rig. He partnered with the Christian Revival Church Association in Liberia.

"They actually practiced drilling on the campus of Brookwood Church and shipped it over. In the first years, it was him flying over with a couple of people from the United States who would find indigenous Liberian crews and train them to drill water wells," Kelley says.

Bergeron turned over his home-building business to his son in 2010 and began working full time to bring water and Christianity to Liberia, Sierra Leone and India.

He also established the organization's model: partner with a local pastor and a local drilling crew; help pastors establish churches; train crews to drill and repair wells and then verify their work.

"If you don't have training, you don't know that this $5,000 well isn't working because of a 50-cent seal. That's the most common part that goes bad, and they're readily available in village markets," Kelley says.

Set Free finished its work in Liberia two years ago and donated the equipment to a local organization.

But Set Free's work in Sierra Leone and India was already progressing and continues - establishing churches, drilling wells and repairing wells.

In India, the life-giving and lifesaving mission expanded to include medical clinics and freeing children from slave labor in brick factories and slate quarries.

The mission to rescue children also began with Bergeron, who has since retired and passed leadership to Kelley.

"Our main partner took Roland to a mine and showed him that the mine was full of kids in slavery," Hendricks says.

Bergeron was determined to help.

Andrew Hendricks, an Upstate native and Program Director of Set Free, helps feed children who are being cared for in India. PROVIDED

“In the middle of the night, we go into these mines, brick factories and take kids out. It’s a massive undertaking, an undercover operation that takes tons of planning,” Hendricks says.

“Most people doing this work are pastors, and they’re putting their lives on the line.”

Typically, the rescues occur during a Hindu festival, when mine operators are partying and distracted. Civilians don’t carry guns in India, but the work is dangerous, Hendricks says. During an early rescue, three pastors were caught, beaten and killed.

Up to 100 rescuers hike through the woods to remote locations and walk back out with as many as 2,500 children, who are taken in different directions to dozens of waiting vehicles, Hendricks says.

About 1,200 rescued children live at a campus built in 2018.

“They go to school. They play. They worship. They’re truly loved and cared for and are reminded that they’re worthy of living and being reunited with their families,” Hendricks says.

Almost three-quarters of the children return to their families, but it’s not possible if parents have died, can’t care for the children – or if they are the ones who sold their children into slavery, he says.

About 10,000 rescued children live with pastors and in church homes across India. “A pastor and his wife usually have about 10 children in their care,” he says.

Some girls make Wellas – colorful stuffed elephants handmade from scraps of material donated by young women who work in the tailoring industry.

“They’re all different. They’re so beautiful. The girls practice sewing and send them to us. We use them to talk about the need for clean water,” says Emily Scurry, Set Free’s Director of Operations and Events. “I have one in my breakfast room. I look at it every morning and wonder about the girl who made it, wonder what her life is like.”

Set Free is nondenominational. But it is a Christian ministry.

“The foundation of everything we do is to open the doors for our pastor partners to share the gospel and plant churches. It’s why we use local indigenous pastors who know the language, who know the culture,” Kelley says.

“Our work is not conditional. Drilling a well is not conditional on the village becoming Christian. But when a humanitarian need is met, the natural organic growth of the church starts.”

Hendricks, who aspired to do mission work, hadn’t realized that Set Free operates from his own backyard. “There’s amazing work happening around the world, and that ministry is based here in Greenville.”

Homes of Hope Gala Raises Over $370,000

The Homes of Hope recent Spring Gala was a night of powerful purpose.

Presented by Park National Bank and hosted by Ava Braatz, Hope in Full Bloom raised $370,944 toward its goal of $572,000. Funds will help Homes of Hope provide safe, affordable housing for low-income families and workforce development opportunities for men overcoming addiction.

Homes of Hope has a dual mission:

- To help the community with the housing crisis, by building energy-efficient, affordable homes for families and individuals
- Breaking the cycle of addiction, homelessness and unemployment by equipping men in recovery with job training, life skills and housing through its Men's Workforce Development program

According to the National Low Income Housing Coalition, South Carolina faces a shortage of more than 108,000 affordable and available rental homes for extremely low-income renters.

Meanwhile, 2,296 drug overdose deaths occurred in South Carolina in 2022, according to the S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control. The S.C. Department of Employment and Workforce reports that only 29% of

Design the Perfect Porch for Your Home

Emily Raines
HBA of Greenville Board President

If you enjoy spending time outside, you're not alone. Outdoor living spaces are a popular design trend in new home construction and remodeling. Whether you're remodeling to make your home better suited to your family's current lifestyle or to spruce it up to be more appealing to potential buyers, adding a front porch can be a great option.

A recent survey of new and prospective home buyers from the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) revealed that a majority of buyers (81%) want a front porch or a rear porch (75%). Spending time outdoors is a treasured past time. According to the National Recreation and Park Association, more than half of all adults (58%) spend more than 30 minutes outside a day. Spending time outside and exposure to green spaces has HYPERLINK "https://www.hsph.harvard.edu/news/hsph-in-the-news/spend-time-outdoors-itll-improve-your-health-say-experts/" been HYPERLINK "https://www.hsph.harvard.edu/news/hsph-in-the-news/spend-time-outdoors-itll-improve-your-health-say-experts/" shown to improve mental and physical health.

If you're thinking about adding a new front porch to your home, here are some things to consider, whether you plan to construct it yourself or hire an experienced contractor:

Size

A porch is an accessory, so it shouldn't overwhelm the house's main structure. Think of your porch as an extension of your home, a space that seamlessly blends with the rest of your property. If you don't consider size, it may look like a poorly designed afterthought.

Experts also recommend thinking about how you envision using your porch. Do you plan to dine al fresco with your family during mild or warm weather months? If so, you'll want a porch at least eight to 10 feet deep to accommodate a table and chairs. Home owners who regularly want to sit outside and enjoy the fresh air should consider a porch that is about six feet or so to accommodate a small loveseat or a couple of chairs.

Location

You will also have to determine which side of the home you'll add your porch to. For example, a south-facing porch will take advantage of the sun's heat but could also get uncomfortable in the summer. The location of your porch also depends on how you want to enjoy your space. If you picture yourself spending the evening unwinding on your porch to watch the sunset, place your porch facing west. Early risers who enjoy reading the newspaper and drinking coffee may want to use maximum light with eastern exposure.

Remember to be intentional with the access point of the porch from your home, the design may have an impact on the interior rooms. For example, you may want to install French or sliding glass doors from the living room or kitchen to create an entrance to the porch.

Features

If possible, consider using the same materials on your porch as those on the exterior of your home. This continuity will not only enhance the aesthetic appeal of your outdoor space but also create a sense of unity in your property. Another way to create a harmonious porch is to coordinate the millwork and other design elements, ensuring they integrate smoothly with the rest of your home.

When designing your porch, it's crucial to consider practical factors such as climate and comfort. If you live in an area with a high insect population, installing screens can help you enjoy your porch without any unwanted guests. If you plan to use your porch in the evenings, adding lighting options or outlets for lamps to your feature list can create a cozy atmosphere. And for those hot summer days, a ceiling fan can keep the porch area cool and comfortable.

A porch can help you and your family relax during the summer season, and it will be an attractive feature to offer potential buyers if you sell your home in the future. Pending Home Sales Jumped 6.1% in March

Elonda Sherman

2025 President of The Greater Greenville Association of Realtors® Owner and Broker-In-Charge of E Real Estate, LLC

Pending home sales increased 6.1% in March – the greatest month-to-month increase since December 2023 (+7.0%) – according to the National Association of REALTORS®. The Northeast experienced month-over-month losses in transactions, while the Midwest, South and West saw gains, which were most substantial in the South. Year-over-year, contract signings grew in the Midwest but fell in the Northeast, South and West – with the Northeast undergoing the greatest decrease.

The Pending Home Sales Index (PHSI) – a forward-looking indicator of home sales based on contract signings – augmented 6.1% to 76.5 in March. Year-over-year, pending transactions lessened by 0.6%. An index of 100 is equal to the level of contract activity in 2001.

“Home buyers are acutely sensitive to even minor fluctuations in mortgage rates,” said Elonda Sherman, 2025 President of The Greater Greenville Association of Realtors® and Broker-In-Charge of E Real Estate, LLC in Simpsonville, SC. “While contract signings are not a guarantee of eventual closings, the solid rise in pending home sales implies a sizable build-up of potential home buyers, fueled by ongoing job growth.”

Mortgage rates fell by around 20 to 30 basis points in March from the first two months of this year. The average mortgage rate was 6.65% in March, down from a 6.96% average in January and down from a 6.84% average in February.

Pending Home Sales Regional Breakdown

The Northeast PHSI dropped 0.5% from last month to 62.5, down 3.0% from March 2024. The Midwest index expanded 4.9% to 77.7 in March, up 1.4% from the previous year.

The South PHSI soared 9.8% to 94.1 in March, down 0.4% from a year ago. The West index climbed 4.8% from the prior month to 58.6, down 2.0% from March 2024.

“Consumers should note that the spring homebuying season typically brings in a surge of home buyers and sellers compared to the winter months,” added Sherman. “In March, signed contracts surged 34.1% from February based on non-seasonally adjusted raw data, reflecting a pattern consistent with previous years. In addition, inventory levels rose by 8.1% in March from the prior month, indicating a more dynamic housing-market environment.”

Carolina Handling Wins Gold And Silver Stevie Awards

Carolina Handling won Gold and Silver Stevie Awards as part of the 23rd Annual American Business Awards.

A material handling integrator, Carolina Handling won a Gold Stevie in the Company Publication category for “Santa’s One Stop Integration Shop,” a pop-up book, and a Silver Stevie in the category, Corporate Social Responsibility Program of the Year, for companies with up to 2,500 Employees, for its 58 for 58 Motorized Pallet Jack Giveaway.

More than 3,600 nominations were received for organizations of diverse sizes and specialties. More than 250 professionals participated in the judging.

Nicknamed the “Stevies” for the Greek word meaning “crowned,” the awards will be presented June 10 in New York City.

“Santa’s One Stop Integration Shop” was written by Carolina Handling’s marketing department and illustrated by Jason Craft.

The 58 for 58 Motorized Pallet Jack

Giveaway was held to honor Carolina Handling’s 58 years in business in 2024 and part of the yearlong philanthropic campaign, Handling Hunger Together. The company donated 58 Raymond motorized pallet jacks to 58 hunger relief organizations throughout the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama.

“We’re always searching for ways to raise brand awareness that are unique and engaging and to give back to our community in meaningful ways,” said Carolina Handling Director of Marketing Donna Waldrep.

Founded in 1966, Carolina Handling is the exclusive Raymond Solutions and Support Center for North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and part of Florida. The company distributes and services forklifts and automation solutions, parts, racking, storage, lighting, and dock and door equipment for manufacturers, warehouses and distribution centers.

Service App

Carolina Handling has launched the Carolina Handling Service App designed to streamline service requests and minimize downtime.

The app uses "first-call fix" technology, imaging, geo-tagging, auto-messaging and QR encryption that provides technicians with the information they need for a repair. Customers can receive real-time updates.

A scan of a QR code on equipment and the ability to upload an image of the issue reduces the time on-site for diagnostics, said James Sanders, Carolina Handling Director of North Operations.

QR codes are linked to the maintenance and repair history of equipment.

The app has been used on 3,000 pieces of equipment. The goal is a 60% increase in problems fixed on the first call, Sanders said.

Speakers Bureau

Carolina Handling has begun a speakers bureau so that experts in areas of material handling can fulfill requests throughout the company's footprint at no charge.

Presenters can cover topics including trends in material handling and supply chain, intralogistics solutions, robotics, careers in material handling, lean management, military-civilian career transition, safety in the workplace, and women in the industry.

The Speakers Bureau will serve as a resource for educators and professional and community organizations.

For information, go to carolinahandling.com and click on Information, then News.

Partner Award

Carolina Handling received the Most Valuable Partner Award for its achievements in 2024, given by the Material Handling Equipment Distributors Association.

This is the fifth consecutive year that Carolina Handling achieved the award. Fewer than 10% of MHEDA's 600 members earn the annual distinction.

To qualify for the award, companies must provide evidence of their commitment to customers, suppliers and associates, industry advocacy, customer service, safety practices, business networking, continuing education and business best practices.

"The MVP Award reflects the dedication of our associates to serve our customers and our community in an elite way. Their ongoing commitment to collaboration and teamwork and their passion for caring for the communities where we work and live is unmatched," said Carolina Handling President and CEO Brent Hillabrand.

May Well Walkers

Bon Secours St. Francis Health System and the Bon Secours Wellness Arena have announced dates for their Well Walkers program.

Available dates are May 13, May 15 and May 29. On those dates, the arena concourse will be open from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Each loop is a quarter-mile. Well Walkers is a free event; no registration is required.

On May 13, Bon Secours stroke care experts will share potentially life-saving information about stroke prevention, signs and symptoms, and what to do in an emergency.

Free parking for Well Walkers participants is provided in the VIP lot at the arena, off Church Street.
